Research Plan for “Strava Simplified”

For my research gathering, I plan on using surveys and interviews to gather my data on how to improve Strava. I chose both of these options because I am able to get a wide range of data from the surveys to get a baseline of how people feel about the app already, and see if there are any patterns in what features are used the most or the least. I am also hoping to get some info on what features could get reworked if they are not being used. I think the hardest part of the surveys for me will be finding people to send the survey out to. Many of the people that I know are all college students, so the amount of versatility I will get will not be as much as I am hoping for. Hopefully the people that I send the survey to can send it to others they know that use Strava. Some of the questions that I plan on using in my survey are as follows (Rough draft of them):

How often do you use Strava?

How long have you been using the app?

Do you currently use Strava's free or paid (subscription) version?

If free: have you considered upgrading? Why or why not?

Is there anything about the app that regularly frustrates you? (open-ended)

For my interviews, I am hoping to get some more in-depth information about the good and the bad of Strava. There are so many small features that I find incredibly difficult to use when it comes to the UI of Strava that I won't be able to figure out just from surveys. Hopefully I will be able to find more when I interview some people. I have many friends who use Strava, and I plan on interviewing several of them. They are all college students, but I know one of them uses the "training" feature a lot in his life. I know some people that use it very casually, but also some individuals that use it for multi-day bike rides in the mountains, multi-hour hikes, and very long runs. Some of the questions I am planning on asking are:

Has the way you use it changed since you first started?

What's the first thing you check when you open Strava?

Can you think of a recent time Strava frustrated you or got in your way? What happened?

Is there anything you've just stopped doing in the app because it was too annoying or confusing?

What's one feature you'd miss if it disappeared?
